Tide of Grassroots Support Lifts Barton Campaign Fundraising

More than 500 people, most of them small donors, helped Hays County Commissioner Jeff Barton to a "highly successful" fundraising period, his campaign announced today.

With fundraising and expense reports due July 15, Barton released his financial reports as required by law this week. In the spirit of transparency, he also provided the press and public with additional disclosure.

The campaign raised $42,587.50 in the first six months of 2009, with a median contribution of $40.

"I'm extremely proud of the broad-based support," Barton said in a prepared statement. "It's a group effort. We have a lot to do in this county -- water, transportation, planning for growth."

Most of Barton's contributions came from two events this spring where the campaign reported more than 500 people attended. Not every one of those donated directly: some were family members with tickets paid for by a head of household, or came as guests of donors who sponsored tables.

Direct donors for the period of Jan. 1 - June 30 totaled between 250 and 260 people and groups, Barton said. (The campaign used a range because some ticket sales at the door for $40 or less did not indicate whether spouses or other adult guests wished to be listed as a donor. For calculating median donations, the campaign assumed 254 donors.)

The State of Texas does not require campaigns to list the number of people who give $50 or less, or to call out Political Action Committee (PAC) contributions, but Barton's campaign did. It reports that slightly more than 90 percent of all donations came from individuals. Under 10 percent came from PACs.

It lists details on 124 cash contributors and three in-kind contributors who all gave more than $50, and reports its estimate of 127 donors of $50 or less.

Donations came from every zip code in Hays County, including significant contributions from the areas of Buda, Kyle, San Marcos, Wimberley, Driftwood, Dripping Springs and Austin.

The median donation was exactly $40, meaning half of all donors gave that amount or more; half gave that amount or less.

Barton was elected in 2006 and took office in 2007. His term expires in 2010. He said he has "broad based fundraising plans" for this fall. "It's harder to build a grass roots campaign like this one," Barton said. "But in the end it's worth it."
